in Family Courts*

INTRODUCTION

Hello, my name is

I am your Guardian and I want to hear all about you.

A Guardian Ad Litem is a social worker who visits children and young people for a Judge who works in Court.

The Judge asks me to find out about you, where you live, what you like and where you go to school. I speak to the Solicitor who talks to the Judge.

Your Solicitor's name is

Your Judge's name is

He or she has been asked to decide what is best for you. They work in a special place called a Family Court.

After I meet you, I will tell the Judge what you have said and what I think is best. The Judge then decides what is best for you after listening to what you and the important people in your life say.

INTRODUCTION

THE JUDGE

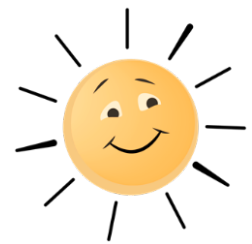

What does the Judge want to know about me?

Sometimes when families can't sort out problems on their own the Judge in the Family Court asks a Guardian to find out what the child/young person in the family thinks and feels about their situation. The Guardian also talks to others who are important to the child/young person to help the Judge make the best decision for them.
